

Saffron Restaurant Spicing it up

An Indian restaurant in Parap is serving up an environmental message with every meal.

Saffron Restaurant serves authentic Indian cuisine, using biodegradable cutlery, plates, bowls and takeaway containers made from starch and a sugarcane byproduct known as bagasse.

The restaurant has had to familiarise its customers with the products, but owner-chef Selvam Kandasamy believes it is worth the difference it's making to the environment.

Although the biodegradable products are a little more expensive, using them means the restaurant does not need dishwashers.

Saffron Restaurant serves authentic Indian cuisine, using biodegradable cutlery, plates, bowls and takeaway containers made from starch and a sugarcane byproduct known as bagasse.

